

National Constitution Center Student Experiences

“During the first month and a half of my internship, I created resources from the database of the National Constitution Center which would be helpful for teachers prior to the Institute. Additionally, I brainstormed potential connections between topics. Also, I helped organize data collected from Institute participants, including the types of schools they taught at, the subjects and grade levels they taught, the state they are from, and more. I noted trends and commonalities and shared that with my supervisors, who were able to use that information to better tailor and focus their Institute. I ultimately helped in the creation of reporting on participant experiences.”

“In preparation for the Institute, I helped create pre-institute resources, scholar and teacher biographies, compilations of teachers educational and pedagogical goals, as well as additional information to include in the virtual tours of the Center’s exhibits. During the time I was given to develop these resources, I learned how to effectively present them. Throughout the preparation process Sarah, and the rest of the NCC staff were available to give guidance and meet with us at least three times a week to collaborate.”
